

Let's Talk Iris

C. D. Evans

The "IRIS BORDER" is new. We shall try to give you news and cultural notes in addition to the price lists. We hope that this publication will help gardeners to a better appreciation of Iris and assist them in getting started with this easy-to-grow perennial. While much of the material may be old news to established Iris growers and collectors, we shall try to give them some refresher material which could be passed on to their friends.

There will be no announced publishing dates, but we will try to make the material in each issue timely.

About the Catalog

Formerly our annual catalog has been in the form of a reference work wherein we gave complete data on each variety offered for sale. We now give full data only on those varieties priced above $1.

Last year we listed Dwarf, Intermediate, and Table varieties—making it possible for you to arrange for continuous Iris bloom over a two-month spring period. This year we will also have a group of varieties that may rebloom in the fall after they have become well-established.

We shall add newer and outstanding varieties in all classifications from time to time so that you need search no farther for the best Iris for planting in this area. We offer for sale only those varieties of Iris that have grown well in our garden and have become acclimated.

Specialization

We grow Bearded Iris—exclusively. Our entire effort is devoted to producing the best Iris rhizomes for planting in this region.

Why Order Early?

All orders are filled in rotation, so earliest orders receive first attention. As many of the newer varieties are in limited supply, some items are invariably sold out early in the season. In brief, early ordering assures you of getting what you want at the best planting time.

When To Plant Bearded Iris

The dormant period for Iris in this locality is July and August. If you want flowers next spring you should plant during the dormant period. You could plant later, even through October, and expect about the same increase, but spring bloom may be lacking. Late plantings do not have time to become properly established to go through the winter in best condition.

Guarantee

All rhizomes are guaranteed to be true to name and healthy.

THE IRIS BORDER

by EVANS IRIS GARDENS —6690 Wilson Mills Road, Gates Mills, Ohio

Our Specimen Display Garden Is A Living Catalog of Iris

Come and visit our garden located at 6690 Wilson Mills Road in Mayfield Village, just east of S.O.M. Center Road, and about 15 miles east of Cleveland's Public Square. Here you will have an opportunity to see many varieties in bloom in season.

A specimen display garden was started last year. In it we have planted specimens of many varieties shown in our lists and expect to add others this summer. The individual clumps are arranged by classified groups: Dwarf Iris in one bed, Miniatures, Intermediate and Table Iris in another bed, with several beds of Tall Bearded Iris. All beds are surrounded by grassed areas.

While peak of bloom is usually during the first week of June we expect to have some Iris in bloom starting about the fourth week of April (Dwarfs) through the latter part of June. With over 300 varieties already planted we should have a fine display.

Buying Iris For The First Time?

Bearded Iris are among the easiest perennials to grow. Colors cover almost the full range of the rainbow. We also have several whites and near-blacks.

The bearded Iris sales unit is called a rhizome, which is a thick, fleshy, elongated rootstock with a fan of leaves at one end. We dig established clumps (plants) and separate them into salable rhizomes. The roots and leaves are pruned so that the rhizome is ready for planting when you receive it. This digging, etc., is only done during the normal dormant period.

Most Iris growers book orders during April, May and June for shipment during July and August. Plants are never dug while in flower. We wait until the dormant period.

Remember, it pays to buy bearded Iris from a specialist. Order early.

Varieties Marked (*)

Throughout the lists you will find a few varieties marked with an asterisk (*). We want you to know they are available, although in short supply. We do not substitute unless you ask us to, but will return your money if unable to ship. Be sure to order early.

DWARF BEARDED IRIS

Under the revised classification (1953), the American Iris Society includes all bearded Iris fifteen inches or less in height as Dwarf Iris. The rapidly increasing membership in the Dwarf Iris Society indicates an interest in the varieties that meet their standard of true dwarf iris. We, therefore, group our listings under two separate headings: True Dwarf Iris—including only those varieties that meet standards of the Dwarf Iris Society: Miniature Iris—all other low growing bearded Iris fifteen inches high or less.

TALL BEARDED IRIS

Tall bearded Iris are easy to grow. They will produce flowers in abundance in almost every hue of the rainbow in return for minimum effort, and with their bold splash of color can be the chief attraction in your garden.

Plant in any fertile soil having reasonable drainage and exposure to sunlight.

Plants should be set out so that the rootstock (rhizome) is barely under the surface of the ground. Bearded Iris will grow but not bloom properly in a shaded location.

For your convenience, we have divided the "Tall Bearded" section into five groups. In the first group, we list many of the newer and choice varieties, followed by four price groupings of the more popular varieties.
